Best free kicks in football history

15. Garrincha, Brazil vs Bulgaria Looking at the corresponding positions of the wall, the goalkeeper and the free-kick itself, it seems that the only way the right foot could put the ball where Garrincha grabs it is by curling it in step. But no. The Brazil international, on the other hand, strikes it over his boots on the outside edge, bending the ball into the top corner to give Seleção a commanding 2-0 lead in this group stage clash of the 1966 World Cup. Great.
14. Lionel Messi, Barcelona vs Liverpool Yes, only No 14 – we're sorry. But just wait to see what we have in store for you later: the bar is high. However, this was significant. Barcelona already led 2-0 in a Champions League semi-final they had not dominated against Liverpool, but this sickening sucker strike killed the Reds at Anfield – conveniently marking Messi's 600th game, paint for Blaugrana. Look at the replay: there was only a slender pocket that the Argentinian wizard could have put the ball in, but struck this so sweetly – just around the wall – that Alisson couldn't get close to it effectively. Ridiculous.
13. Hakan Calhanoglu, Hamburg vs Borussia Dortmund Turkish midfielder Calhanoglu has developed a reputation as a free-kick specialist in recent years – and this is the most astonishing thing he has hit so far. Despite 45 yards separating the ball from the net, the then hamburger man knows the two with this ferocious strike that arrowed towards goal before a dramatic turn left at the last minute. The only reason this 2014 free-kick loses points is Dortmund's complete apathy in defending it. Even if I said that, there wasn't much they could have done.12. Lasse Schone, Ajax vs Feyenoord Keep it tight for the first 20, boys. Don't give away anything stupid. Probably feyenoord boss Giovanni van Bronckhorst's instructions before this classic encounter against Ajax, but the Dutchman's players were unable to comply. However, there is never a player to worry about a free kick when it is 40 metres away. Nonetheless, just 53 seconds later, Schone put Ajax ahead at the Amsterdam Arena,= after allowing a tear with an astonishing pole driver kissing the bar on the way in. MORE THAN A GAME The most hate-20s brawling club in Holland: Ajax vs Feyenoord11. Theofilo Cubillas, Peru vs ScotlandCubillas hardly seem interested as Peru prepare to take this set against Scotland in 1978, and three of his team-mates gathered on the edge of the opposition box. But it was probably part of a performance where Juan Munante steps over the ball and Cubillas gently stuffed around the wall outside his foot. It's a great skill and probably the best free kick in World Cup history (sorry Beckenbauer).10. Paul Gascoigne, Tottenham v Arsenal Photo of the scene. You play an FA Cup semi-final at Wembley followed against the biggest rivals. Only four minutes have passed and the game is still when you're awarded a free kick 40 yards out. He might as well have. Couldn't. Dig, doesn't it? That's exactly what Paul Gascoigne did in 1991. The Tottenham midfielder stabbed his strip straight into the middle of the ball and produced a missile that appeared destined for the top corner as soon as he had hit it. The free-kick seemed to accelerate the further it travelled, leaving David Seaman with no hope of keeping it out despite managing to get a glove on the ball.9. Cristiano Ronaldo, Manchester United v PortsmouthRonaldo were unstoppable in the 2007/08 season, just like this free-kick in the 2-0 defeat by Portsmouth that sent Manchester United to the top of the table in late January. Beaten with poison, the ball flies over the wall and at the last minute sinks decisively to leave David James in the lurch. It must undoubtedly be the best [I have seen in the Premier League], Alex Ferguson said afterwards. From that distance, he hits them. No keeper in the world would save it. 00:23 is what you're looking for.8. Alvaro Recoba, Inter Milan vs BolognaPerhaps the most entertaining thing about this dodging free-kick since 2003 is a futile attempt by the wall to stop it. The Uruguayan magician hasn't hit many sweeter than this.7. Juninho Pernambucano, Lyon vs Bayern MunichTouche this whole list could just fine be Juninho's efforts, like managing the Brazilian's dead ball. Powering this race for al-Rayyan's inert howitzer This vicious juggler versus Sedan, This effortless pass to World Cup warm-up Brazil and this ridiculous rocket against Werder Bremen is a unique effort by the former Lyon playmaker in the 2-1 victory over Bayern in 2003. The ball appears to be going miles over the bar when Juninho first contacts it, but is just the right amount of dip to bring it back in time. Watch out for poor Oliver Kahn, who adds insult to injury by crashing head first into the property in a futile attempt to keep it away. Interview The greatest free kick taker of all time: Juninho Pernambucano on how he got so good. Paulinho, Guangzhou Evergrande v Kashima ReysolYes Tottenham fans that Paulinho. The move to the Chinese Super League has surprisingly revived the midfielder's international career, although this 2016 free-kick was so good that Brazil boss Tite would probably have called him, even if he had done it in Hackney Marshes. As often, the camera angle from behind the goal is the most instructive. Here it shows Paulinho's astonishing strike gradually advancing to the right until it lands in the top corner with the Kashima goalkeeper barely moving. What's Mandarin? Go to 0:18 if you don't like montages.5. David Beckham, England v GreeceCircumstance and context must be taken into account when assessing any purpose, and are no exception. England led Greece 2-1 in this 2002 World Cup qualifier when Teddy Sheringham's nudge was fouled in the third minute of the second half. A play-off against Ukraine loomed unless the three Lions could muster a handicap goal from somewhere. Step forward Beckham, who kept his cool to deliver a trademark curl over the wall into the top corner, sending Old Trafford wild. Let's hope no one left early to beat traffic. (Is that what they did?) 4. Mikael Nilsson, IFK Goteborg vs PSV O first look, this does not look like a particularly spectacular free-kick from Nilsson in the 1992/93 Champions League. However, the replay reveals its true nature: the Goteborg defender manages to apply an outrageous amount of curl to the ball, flummoxes both the wall and the goalkeeper as it flashes around the first and dodges the latter. Now they know he can shoot... Oh, they know he can shoot! remarked an enthusiastic Clive Tyldesley when Nilsson pulled the trigger to score his second goal later in the same game.3. Roberto Carlos, Brazil versus FranceLet. Roberto Carlos wasn't a good free-kicker. Your thundery left-back was more likely to choose line Z than a stamp throughout his career, and his reputation in the dead eye unfortunately does not match reality. However, it would be presumptuous to suggest that his physique-defying banana shot against France in 1997 was not one of the greatest free-kicks of all time. After taking a good 10 seconds to place the ball exactly as he wanted, Carlos unleashed an exceptional off-foot strike whose trajectory began at the far end but somehow curled back inside to find the net. It still doesn't make sense. BIG GOALS RETOLD 'I aimed for A at La Poste but it went miles away from that' 2. Mohd Faiz Subri, Penang FA vs Pahang FAFaiz was a well-deserved Pusaka Award winner of the dazzling goal of 2016 – ahead of Neymar, Lionel Messi, Saul Niguez and others – for this outrageous free-kick in the Malaysian Super League. The mind gets confused as it watches the ball bend one way around the wall and finally completely changes course, eventually ending up in the opposite corner of the net. It may be a cliché, but two goalkeepers would not have been able to keep this free-kick out.1. Oleksandr Aliyev, Ukraine U20s vs Turkey U20sDistance, power, accuracy, evasive action and a satisfying rope from below the bar: this free-kick has it all. At the 2005 Under-20 World Cup, Aliyev takes a straight run and strikes the ball towards goal, and Turkey goalkeeper Serkan Kirintili barely got a chance despite having an disobedient view of the shot. It is such a clean tackle from Ukraine No 8, who somehow manages to get the ball moving towards the corner of the net after a couple of early swings in the air. Simply sensational. Read now...
